Senior Vice President and Trader, Discretionary Energy
The D. E. Shaw Group
New York

Rui Dong joined the D. E. Shaw Group in 2005, where she is a senior member of the Discretionary Energy team, which primarily trades crude oil, natural gas, refined products and power markets. Dong is involved in trading both directional and relative-value opportunities, including calendar and cross-commodity spreads. Additionally, she leads research initiatives both within the energy team and as part of collaborative firm-wide projects, working to stay on top of shifts in energy market dynamics both tied to macro considerations, such as geopolitical and policy factors, and based on the firm's bottom-up research and analysis. Recent energy-related themes have included increased interconnectivity of US and global natural gas markets, US shale production dynamics, international fuel import/export patterns, and post Covid-19 mobility patterns. She also mentors new hires and is active in the firm's DESCO Women affinity group, whose activities include lunch-and-learn conversations, after-hours social events, and hosting prominent speakers. She has a BA in Computer Science and Economics from Harvard University.
